

James Obtains Summary Judgment for Logistics Company

Paul James recently obtained summary judgment in favor of a Montgomery based logistics company sued as a result of a significant leg injury suffered by the Plaintiff at a local manufacturing facility. The Plaintiff alleged that the logistics company failed to properly protect him from injury associated with his activities in driving to and from the logistics company and a local manufacturing facility. The defense argued correctly that the company did not breach any duty owed to the Plaintiff and that arguably, the Plaintiff's action constituted contributory negligence as a matter of law. The trial court granted summary judgment for James' client.
